KNEAVES STEALS RUN WHICH SALTS GAME

While Perryman Indulges in a Few Peaceful Moments Roanoke Thirdsacker Skims Over Paths With Only Count of Contest. BY GUS MALBERT.

Resolved, That it being clearly proved that a most rabid jinx is now haunting the unmowed lawn resting within a fence in West Broad, the said unmowed lawn being the habitat of a breed of fledgelings, which breed for the sake of euphony, has been dubbed Colts, that President Boatwright, or some one with equal authority, do right at this moment transfer from Richmond all battles yet to take place between the said breed of Colts and any other breed nurtured in the Virginia League of Professional Baseball Clubs, to Somewhere, Anywhere, Nowhere, Everywhere, so long as said location be as far removed as the mind of man can grasp from the home of anything which bears even a passing resemblance to one William Goat. Of course, we have no hard feelings against Hertrand. He is a perfectly pleasing individual, and if we must admit, it is a nice boy. Still it might have been possible for Buck Pressley to accept that eight or nine million dollars offered for the lad several months ago, and in that way dispose of bilm. There are several reasons why the defeat was particularly Raley. His line of argument wasn't had, excepting that he failed to take into account that Kneaves is a very fast man. After selding the ball Perryman found that he had nothing to spare, and was forced to throw without steadying himself. The result was a poor heave, which pulled Raley way to one side and made it next to impossible to canch the ball. After that more slow work allowed the runner to advance to third and then cap his feat by stealing home. The one run is directly chargeshed to Perryman, but at that, the game should never have been won by that then score.

chargeable to Perryman, but at that, the game should never have been won by that lone score.

Umptre O'Brien missed one yesterday. He has been uniformly good in the two series he has worked here, but when he catled hantles count to the finishe of first four, le was wrent. The ball was hit fair, and Kenaves on third. That was in the seventh, too, and but for O'Brien's decision Perryman might not have been on first and Kenaves on third. That was in the seventh, too, and but for O'Brien's decision Perryman might not have had to resort to an error and slowness to allow Reinnoks to score.

Gins simply remped away with everything which came his way. He had all chances, and several of them were great catches of hard trees, Indeed, the whole Roanoke club played in grand style, white Garlin was never in better condition, nor has be delivered in more effective style.

Gardin showed his perfect control all the way. He walked Griffin twice perfectly, out outside of that not even the suspicion of a free trip was noted.
